Whether to enforce planning control is at the local authority's discretion - they can choose to do nothing. We would argue they should do nothing in such cases, as much needed stopping places are being provided, and potentially more unsuitable unauthorised encampments are being prevented. ~~Also the 1998 DETR and Home Office Guide to Managing Unauthorised Encampments says that "toleration can be for days, weeks, months or years"~~

If a private landlord invites Travellers or Gypsies onto their own land how quickly does law enforcement occur? Do the police have any powers - or does it then become a planning issue?
